

So, what is HS2 all about?

First it was about speed, but now the Government say 'speed is irrelevant'.

Then it was about having a great business case, but that was rubbished by economists.

Then it was about taking planes out of the air, but there is only a 1% modal shift predicted.

Then it was about a 'low carbon economy', but the DfT admitted in court that it won't be.

Then it was about joining the 'high speed revolution', but we've had HSR since the 1970s.

Then it was about capacity, but HS2 doesn't deliver capacity where it is actually needed.

Now it's about rebalancing the North-South divide, but it would actually make it worse.

So what is HS2 all about? Well it's not about winning votes, and that's for sure.
